Doctor Who - Haemovore Mask screen used prop

The character is seen in the story prominently during the haemovores' first appearance at the climax of episode 2, as they rise en masse rise from the sea (see photo). He is the central character with the black suit and cap and is most easily identifiable in the DVD special edition of the story during this extended scene. Subsequently he appears as a background character in multiple scenes including their attack on St.Judes Church.

The mask remains in excellent condition with just a few spots of wear to the surface. The interior has the words 'world war' and the actor's name (Raymond Martin) written in pen -now quite faded but still legible. Whilst Martin is not credited on screen he is listed as taking part in the production elsewhere, including Doctor Who Magazine's archive feature and Outpost Gallifrey's online episode guide.

Whilst I do not have actual provenance for this item, as it was acquired through an unlikely source, its labelling would appear to confirm its authenticity while production images show the correct level of detail (e.g the elastic strap) and having viewed the DVD I am convinced this is a screen used prop. Additionally the accompanying items in the collection included a quantity of DW props that are far too superfluous and badly aged to have been fan replicas.

I am happy to offer a full refund should the winner be unhappy with their purchase. Should you require larger or more detailed images please drop me a line
